

Ha Vu graduated from Lafayette College in 2017 with a degree in Computer Science and Anthropology & Sociology, and a minor in Film and Media Studies. She was closeted the majority of her college career, so her LGBTQ cred at Lafayette came late in senior year with one grand on-stage performance in a band called “Queeromantics.” As a cisgender bisexual Asian woman, she is very enthusiastic and honored to contribute to Lafayette College’s collective queer narratives, because she has finally learnt that politicizing personal stories is not self-centered but very important as part of collective resistance and advocacy. She hopes her reflection can serve as both records of progress and evidence of some of the problems and invisibility queer students, especially queer students who are part of other underrepresented groups, experience on campus.

Currently, she works as a software developer in New York, and volunteers in her free time to teach Computer Science in high school.
